Jeff,

I know I floored you with my initial response to the opportunity you proposed. But, just so there's no question about it, I've always wanted the AE job in Atlanta.

As you know, I'm handling some personal issues at home right now. But those should be cleared up in the next few months.

I understand when you make a hire, or job change MetLife expects a commitment. As an example of my level of commitment to you and this business, I've needed surgery on at least one of my knees for over a year (my knee makes noise when I stand and sit, I have trouble going up and down stairs, and at times I have trouble simply walking or standing - which is why I have a bottle of Glucosamine in my office).

I haven't had this surgery yet, because I wanted to establish myself in this market and with you. I'll most likely wait until spring when the sales cycle is slow and weather is good, and then take the time I need to get healthy.

I just want both of you to know that I am 100% committed. This opportunity came at a bad personal time, but I will make sure that I give this job the time that it needs!

Thank you for your patience!

Jeff,

Considering the time of year, I'd really like to get started on calling brokers.

Do we have a set date where I will be able to take over broker assignments?

Thanks,
